1. In mid-August 1951, the Southwest Air Force Construction Committee established a branch office in Kueiyang known locally as the Air Force Construction Office.
2. The Committee also mobilized 12,000 civilian laborers for work on Kueiyang Airfield. Approximately 500 men from the 203 and 204 Units of the Southwest Air Force Command are now engaged in the engineering work on the field.
3. In mid-September FU Ch'uan-tso (傅傳作), commander of the Southwest Air Force, arrived in Kueiyang from Ch'engtu to inspect Kueiyang Airfield and to attend the inauguration ceremonies for the Kueiyang Office of the Civil Aviation Administration of the Revolutionary Military Council. This office, which is headed by TSO Chien (左堅), is inside the former CATC office.
